Spirituality in the 21st Century

Coming of Age in the Milky Way: Spiritual Transformation and Creative Hope!

For the first time in human history, we share a common universe story. For some, this emerging narrative is an invitation to growth and spiritual transformation. For others, it is a fearful prospect that evokes resistance, retreat and regression.

As a result, our political, cultural and religious institutions are increasingly polarized and ineffective. We are facing a crisis that makes profound demands on each of us.

Is religion dying or being transformed?

Am I losing my faith or encountering the Holy in a deeper way?

Does my commitment to work for justice and to care for Earth make a difference, or is it too late?

These are not likely the issues that you will hear debated on cable news or talk radio. But they are the quiet, urgent questions that are stirring in our hearts.

These are also the questions that this Spirituality in the 21st Century conference explores. Evolutionary spirituality is not a passing theological fad. It is the context of today and of all our tomorrows—the agenda that the cosmos itself is revealing. More immediately, it is a vision that challenges our current religious institutions and calls us to a new way of seeing and responding.

After outlining the significance of evolutionary spirituality, we will focus on the personal, communal implications of this vision for our lives. The contemporary summons to discipleship is as old as the gospel and as urgent as this morning's headlines. It is the call to be a life-long learner, a long-distance servant. In specific terms, it is the challenge to "come of age" by moving beyond our anthropocentric, egocentric concerns to embrace our responsibility to God, to Earth and to one another.
